Inmate advocates praise step toward compliance

By LEE WILLIAMS and ESTEBAN PARRA
The News Journal

Five months after signing a compliance agreement with the U.S. Department of Justice, the Delaware Department of Correction released a 47-page plan Thursday to improve medical and mental health care in prisons by restoring the government's control over the medical staff and by strengthening oversight of its care providers.

The plan includes a formal agreement with former Superior Court Judge Joshua W. Martin III, now in private practice in Wilmington, to serve as the independent monitor required in the memorandum of agreement with the Justice Department. It did not lay out cost for the implementation.

Martin did not return calls seeking a comment about his new position.

The department's "Comprehensive Action Plan" responds to a series of lapses in inmate medical and mental health care first revealed by

TO-DO LISTHere's a rundown of some of the problems identified at the Department of Correction and the steps being taken to address them.

Problem: Standards for care and procedures for administering care, medication, transfers for emergency or specialty care were inadequate and left to the contracted medical care provider to set and implement.

Remedial step: DOC is drafting a full set of policies and procedures for health and mental health care to replace those set by the contractor.

Problem: Inadequate staffing and poor oversight of compliance by Correction Department.

Remedial step: State renegotiated its contract with the medical vendor in April, requiring hiring of 14 additional mental health workers and 25 medical care workers, including medical director, mental health director and director of nursing, all full time. The department added five new state positions in its Office of Health Services.

Problem: Inadequate facilities for programs delivered in secure and private settings.

Inmates. Lawmaker saysFROM PAGE A1

The News Journal and later confirmed by a Justice Department investigation. The federal probe found that the state's poor medical care violated the constitutional rights of the inmates.

The proposal identifies the actions the Department of Correction intends to take to bring its four facilities into compliance, including adding 44 members to the medical staff. Those facilities are the Young Correctional Institution, Baylor Women's Correctional Institute, the Delaware Correctional Center and the Sussex Correctional Institution.

"We approved the plan, and it looks to be a comprehensive plan on paper," said U.S. Attorney Colm F. Connolly. "We look forward to seeing the DOC implement it fully."

Timelines for fixes

All of the deficiencies observed by federal investigators, and more, are addressed. Each problem includes a "timeline for completion," a target date set by the department when officials expect to see the problem brought into compliance.

It includes changes to policies and procedures; record-keeping; medication and laboratory orders; staffing and training; screening and treatment; access to care; chronic disease care; medication management; emergency care; mental health care; suicide prevention, and quality assurance.

Most notably, it calls for the Department of Correction to draft and revise health care policies to replace those currently provided by the state's medical vendor - Correctional Medical Services. Nationwide, CMS has been the target of hundreds of lawsuits brought by inmates or their survivors who allege poor prevention, and identification of inmates with mental health disorders were not, according to the timelines, scheduled to be brought into compliance until January.

"It looks like a great plan when it's completed, but we need the personnel a lot faster than they've got them coming in," Sullivan said. "They've got to bring a crisis team in there now, even if it's people coming in from other jobs."

Rita Marocco, executive director of the National Alliance on Mental Illness of Delaware, like Sullivan, said any inmate with severe mental illness belongs in the Delaware Psychiatric Center, not a state prison.

"It's a step in the right direction," Marocco said. "It looks like a compliance plan we really like. [Correction Commissioner] Carl Danberg has the will to make an effort to change how business is done at the DOC."

Changes will take years

State Sen. Charlie Copeland, R-West Farms, co-founder of the Delaware Coalition for Prison Reform and Justice, pointed out the proposal is only the first step required by the Department of Justice.

"The next step is implementing the plan," he said. "Some of these things are a year or two out. I am glad to see the state is taking the federal oversight seriously."

Dover attorney Steve Hampton, who has represented several inmates and their families in lawsuits, said the state still needs to accept responsibility for poor care. In the settlement agreement, the state was not required to admit to constitutional violations found by federal investigators.

"I'm peeved about this because I want someone to say there was a problem, something went wrong."
